ABSTRACT

This newsletter presents a list of 248 special education curriculum guides, identified as exemplary through the National Special Education Curricula Survey, a national service project of the Indiana Department of Education. The survey was sent to personnel at state departments of education, universities, schools, community agencies, and special projects. The guides included those produced by state departments of education, educational publishers, and nonprofit groups. Citations, in one alphabetical list, provide the title, source, source address, development date, price, number of pages, recommended exceptionality area(s) and recommended educational level(s). An index directs the reader to guides appropriate for the following specific populations: mildly, moderately, or severely mentally retarded; emotionally handicapped; learning disabled; speech, hearing, and language disorders; deaf and hearing-impaired; blind and visually-impaired; gifted; multiply handicapped; infants; and preschool children. Additionally, the index includes some 29 subject areas (e.g., adult day activities, affective education, autism, career and vocational education, parent involvement, recreation and leisure, and transition). The Indiana Federation Council for Exceptional Children proudly presents the results of a national service project of the Indiana Department of Education, Division of Special Education.

Educators' Guide to Exemplary Special Education Curricula: Results of a National Field Based Survey (1987)

REINVENTING WHEELS

Curriculum development is a difficult task. It is made even more difficult because no national listing of special education curricula exists. It only follows that a listing of exemplary special education curricula could not exist . . . until now. The National Special Education Curricula Survey, a national service project of the Indiana Department of Education, is a project designed to identify exemplary special education curricula. If exemplary special education curricula can be identified (and they can), then curricula development committees throughout the nation will have models to use and may even identify an already developed curricula which can be used "off the shelf." Why reinvent the wheel?

The procedures used to identify exemplary special education curricula through the National Special Education Curricula Survey were as follows . . . First, reporting forms were sent to over 800 locations throughout the nation. These potential respondents included every state department of education, at least two universities in each state and hundreds of schools, community agencies and special projects. Respondents were asked to "identify exemplary special education curricula" by title, source, source address, copyright date, approximate price, number of pages, recommended exceptionality area(s) and recommended level(s). Respondents reported 248 guides as exemplary.

The body of this publication consists of an alphabetical listing of reported exemplary curricula including the title, source, source address, development date, price, number of pages, etc. for each guide. If a piece of information was not provided, such is indicated by "not reported" in the entry. Each title is preceded by a sequential reference number which is used in conjunction with the Curricula Selection Index. The Curricula Selection Index is a listing of respective reference numbers, by category, to aid in curricula identification.

In summary, the Special Educators, Guide to Exemplary Curricula: Results of a National Field Based Survey (1987) is a complete listing of exemplary special education curricula as reported through the Indiana Department of Educations's National Special Education Curricula Survey. Hopefully, this publication will aid all involved in special education curricula development and selection. Exemplary curricula is the beginning of Excellence in Education.

Your school district wants to revise and improve the special education curricula. You were invited to be a member of the curriculum development committee. The first meeting was less than a success . . . half the committee members couldn't make the meeting, and the coffee and doughnuts (which were promised in lieu of pay) never did arrive. The second meeting was not much better. No one knew where to begin in searching for curricular models though one member kept mentioning the "red guide" whe had seen as an undergraduate . . . but she couldn't remember it's title. Does this sound familiar? Did you attend those meetings? If so, read on, this issue is for you.
